

1930 RATES GOING UP STILL HIGHER

Mass. Compulsory Auto Insurance Figures Soaring

Boston, Aug. 18 (UP)—Compulsory automobile insurance rates in Massachusetts for 1930 may be even higher than the increased rates for 1929, announced yesterday, it was learned here today.

While it was too early to make any definite prediction along the line, an official of the Massachusetts automobile bureau stated, it was conceivable that the higher 1929 rates would fail to adequately cover the insurance companies' losses.

"The 1929 rates were based on our experience during 1927—the first year that compulsory insurance was effective in Massachusetts," the official said. "In establishing the 1930 rates, insurance authorities will have the benefit of two years' experience. It is perfectly possible that the 1929 rates will prove too low and that even higher rates will be necessary for the following year."

Tentative rates for 1930 on pleasure cars, as announced yesterday by Wesley E. Monk, state insurance commissioner, showed increases in some cases almost double the 1929 rates.

Despite the rate boost, George A. Parker, registrar of motor vehicles, said today he did not believe the increases would keep many cars off the road.

"Our experience thus far has indicated that compulsory insurance has had little effect in keeping cars off the road," he said. "For that reason, it seems improbable that the higher rates for pleasure cars in some classes and in some territories will discourage motorists."

"I have no doubt that many Massachusetts motorists feel that the tentative rates for 1930 are too high. But if they are high it is the motorists who are responsible. If the motorists had fewer accidents it would be possible to establish lower rates."

"It must be remembered that next year there is to be a big reduction in the registration fee and this saving will offset to some degree the increase in insurance rates. Of course there also is to be a gasoline tax but the payment of this assessment naturally will be spread over the entire motoring season and hence will not be felt as much as otherwise might be the case."

NEEDLE REMOVED FROM MAN'S HEART

Buffalo Patient Recovering From Dangerous Operation

Buffalo, N. Y., Aug. 18 (UP)—Morgan Downey, 29, is recovering in a hospital here after a remarkable operation for the removal of a gold-tipped needle which had become imbedded in his heart.

The needle was in the mattress of the bed he was sleeping on and in some manner had pierced him. Downey attempted to pry it out but instead forced the sharp silver of steel further into his body.

Subsequent examinations showed that the heart in its contractions had drawn the needle further into itself.

An operation was then performed by Dr. Timothy Donovan of the Emergency hospital staff. To dislodge the piece of steel, an opening was made in the chest wall and the sac protecting the heart was opened. By feeling with his fingers, Dr. Donovan was able to touch the tip of the needle in the back of the heart when the organ contracted.

It required 75 minutes to gain a firm hold and dislodge the needle. Downey came here three years ago from El Paso, Tex.

Petitioners Claim That Berlin Man Has Failed to Obey Orders of the Court

A petition for a motion to cite in Louis Corbett of Berlin, because why he should not be adjudged in contempt of court was filed today in the court of common pleas by John and Anna Klutz through Attorney Lawrence J. Golon.

In the petition the plaintiffs state that on June 22 the Honorable Thomas J. Molloy, judge and clerk of the court, ordered Corbett to remove an obstruction and allow water to take its natural course on the estate adjoining that of the Klutz farm in Berlin. It is claimed that the defendant refused to remove the obstruction contrary to the court's order.

Further refusal to abide by the court's decision, the plaintiffs ask that an order be issued citing the defendant to appear before the court of common pleas in Hartford on August 22 to show cause why he should not be adjudged in contempt of the court's orders.

In the original writ the plaintiffs charged the defendant with building an obstruction across a creek by filling it with gravel, boards and rubbish thereby preventing the natural flow of the water to another branch of the creek which the plaintiffs used for irrigation purposes.

HIP-POCKET RAIDS STIR NEW YORKERS

New York, Aug. 18 (UP)—Persons high in social and business circles were threatening to file protests with the collector of the port today after federal authorities launched a "hip-pocket" raid as the latest feature of their attempt to dry up New York.

The search, in which was conducted on the R. de France, on which Secretary of State Frank B. Kellogg was among the passengers bound for Europe, came after a federal grand jury had issued subpoenas for 125 prominent persons, charging them with violating the prohibition law by drinking in night clubs.

Four thousand persons were assembled at the French line pier last night, many of them in evening clothes. Some were passengers on the liner and others had gone to the pier to tell friends goodbye.

Federal agents blocked the exits from the pier and as the visitors came off the boat just before it sailed, many of them were searched. The procedure of the dry agents was to halt a man now and then and rapidly "frisk" him, paying special attention to hip pockets. No liquor was found. In reply to indignant protests, dry agents told the visitors that "orders were orders."

Federal authorities explained that more subpoenas would have been served on night club patrons if so many of them had not been abroad. It was said that the government was carefully checking the movements of many persons now in Europe and that subpoenas would be handed to them when they landed in the United States.

Although the list was kept secret, dry agents said there were many residents of the exclusive Park avenue section of it, and that it also included many prominent operators in Wall street. The inquiry will be started at 10 a. m. Monday and is expected to continue through next week.

CURTIS COMPLETES 38 YEARS SERVICE

north side of the city, Senator Curtis grew up here and fought the early struggles of a lawyer before entering political life at the age of 24, as prosecuting attorney for Shawnee county. It is his boast that in that office he was the man who first enforced Kansas' dry law back in the 90's, and the expected touch on that controversial subject later today in his address of acceptance.

Crowds Arrive Early

The widespread lawn of the state here greeted the early today as the neighbors took up the stations under the shady elms to await the opening of exercises at 4 p. m. Then the eight bands which have been assembled will begin a musical program. Not until 5 p. m. will the speaking start.

Because of the extensive radio broadcasting hookup arranged for the ceremony, word announcement was made that the exercises would go ahead on the state house grounds rather than from a platform erected from the long stairs leading down the south side of the capitol.

Governor Ben Paulen will open the ceremony, which will be followed by the Rev. J. R. McFall, pastor of the First Methodist Episcopal church. Then Gov. Paulen will introduce Senator Fees of Ohio, who was temporary chairman of the republican convention and was designated by the convention to notify Senator Curtis of his nomination.

It was planned to have Senator Fees begin his brief address about 5 p. m., when the radio broadcasting starts. He will be followed by Senator Curtis, who has prepared an address of about 30 minutes' delivery in which he will discuss for the first time the campaign issues.

There were visitors here today from far and wide. Among them was Judge Dan Case of Hawaii, whose father took Curtis in as a law partner. Accompanying Chairman Work was Governor Fisher of Pennsylvania. Mrs. Mabel Walker Willebrandt, as assistant attorney general, stopped off on her return to Washington from the Hoover notification exercises.

ATE SO MUCH HIS SALARY JUST HAD TO BE DOUBLED

Kilz-Orda, Turkistan, Aug. 18 (UP)—A Kazengolab (widely known as Ivan the red-eyed) is so much that government officials were forced to double his salary.

Ivan is more than seven feet tall and correspondingly stout. He works on the Turkistan-Siberia railroad and can shift a rail that would tax the strength of several men.

His compensation was at first $100 a month, but he was afflicted with an enormous appetite, for instance, 10 to 15 pounds of bread with every meal. His salary was insufficient to meet his grocery bill.

The local economic commission, which fixes wage scales, decided that the work the red-eyed one did in comparison with other laborers was cheap at half the price and ordered his pay doubled.

Stranded Destroyer Is Reloated at High Tide

New Bedford, Mass., Aug. 18 (UP)—After being stranded nearly 24 hours on the south side of Pasque island, the U. S. E. Childs, flagship of the destroyer fleet in New England waters, was floated at high tide today.

Two coast guard destroyers cooperated in removing the Childs from the ledge on which it grounded during yesterday's fog.

Buckley has claimed $52,000,000 from the Standard Oil company for oil taken from the lands and since 1925 the suit has been before Mexican courts.

This writ was granted for only 72 hours but attorneys for the oil company expected that the writ would be made permanent.

The building is off brick with stone trim. Built on the site of the old North station, its main features are a concourse 466 feet long and a waiting room 276 feet long. On the upper floor will be the new arena to be known as the Boston Madison Square Garden.

MRS. HOOVER BACK IN OLD HOME TOWN

Revisits Scenes of Her Early Childhood

Whittier, Cal., Aug. 18 (AP)—Some 40 years ago a little girl named Lou Henry arrived in the village of Whittier on a stage from Newark, Cal., accompanied by her mother, father and sister.

The one small hotel in the village was crowded, so friends took the family into their home until they could find other accommodations.

Yesterday Lou Henry returned to Whittier—returned as Mrs. Herbert Hoover, wife of the republican presidential nominee and arrived in a large automobile escorted by police motorcycles which screamed an open path for the car along the paved streets.

Mrs. Hoover came back to receive the degree of doctor of literature from Whittier college, which she attended in the days when it was Whittier academy, a small school sponsored by the Friends church.

Add as she stepped into the lobby of the large hotel where her friends of former days were gathered, the first persons she met were a white haired man with a can, and his wife. "Why, Mr. and Mrs. Briggs," exclaimed Mrs. Hoover, "I remember you well—you provided the first bed I slept on in Whittier!"

"To think that she remembered us," beamed the old couple as Mrs. Hoover moved on to other old time friends who filled the room.

Tall, smiling and making everyone feel at home, she took men and women by their hands, looked laughingly into their faces and called them by name—those friends whom she had not seen in years.

The matter of awarding the honorary degree waited while her honored guest of the city met her girlhood friends.

"Why Lou Henry, do you really remember me?" echoed around the room. "Lou Henry" always did.

Mrs. Willis E. Wood, who was Miss J. J. Wood, remembered her, had a picture of the girl's ten drill team of the eighth grade in the days they went to school together. Lou Henry was on the left end with her fan posed—captain of the team.

After the greetings a procession of members of the faculty and members of the board of trustees of the Quaker college formed a line and marched across the street to the First Friends church, where the degree was conferred.

The exercises were very informal—with some of the atmosphere of the gathering of old friends in the hotel lobby.

Dr. Walter F. Dexter, president of the college, in conferring the degree upon Mrs. Hoover, the first honorary degree ever given a woman by the Quaker college, tributed to her "friendly interest, which has been deep and enduring in national and international scope."

"Your intellectual pursuit," he said, "have been broad and comprehensive. Your translation in collaboration with your distinguished husband of De Agricultural Re Matricula has given you a place of prominence among schools of today."

ing the race course. The 1,600 policemen on duty had great difficulty in controlling the huge crowds and preventing traffic jams.

Farmers raised a rich harvest by charging onlookers for the privilege of viewing the race from their lands.

An enterprising Belfast man bought an unused chuck at Dundonald the starting point. He removed the pews and converted them into a stand with the prospect of making as much as the building cost him by accommodating spectators.

The eve of the race was a sleepless one for the city. Trams, motor buses and other vehicles maintained a regular service during the night and conveyed thousands of spectators to vantage points along the course. Many persons spent the night in the open to be on hand for the race.

Ford Is Entered

All the cars were standard models. The United States was represented by the Stutz and the new model Ford. France had four makes entered, Great Britain had 22, Austria three, Belgium two and Italy and Germany one each.

The conditions included a handicap allowance of laps at the start. The competitors were to be started from along the side of the pits with their engines stopped. On the opposite side from the cars the drivers were to line up at the dropping of the flag as a starting signal they were to cross the road to their cars, raise the hoods and start the engines. Two laps had to be covered with the hoods up. At the end of that time the cars were to be stopped at an angle from the hoods closed before the race was continued.
